

traces in a steady horizontal direction and they shed light - The globe did not.

Although nothing can ultimately be proved about anything, there is a point where one may say "it would seem to be so." The UFO question, for me, has not reached it. The whole subject is open to fake, wishful thinking and publicity seeking. However, 100 years ago the idea of television would have met with the same scepticism that UFOs do today.

I hardly believe that I saw this globe of light, yet I know that I did see it. I would be very grateful if you could let me know of any other investigations I could make, or if you have any explanation of this odd occurrence.

Thanking you,
Yours faithfully,

P.S. Satellites are always thought to be, and to remain, out in the "wide blue yonder." Are they, and do they?

Please don't dub me just another crank. I'm just an astounded realist.
